Sucked into a parallel universe of B-Grade sci-fi - three ordinary guys go on a hilarious quest to find their way home.

Synopsis

Sucked into a parallel universe of B-Grade sci-fi, three ordinary guys go on a perilous quest to find their way home. An action packed comedy adventure of giant lizards, amazon women, evil warlords and space battles that has to be seen to be believed. "A wonderful film, very funny - every SF fan should see it!" – Sci-Fi London Film Festival

Longer Synopsis

What happened to the good old days of sci-fi, when spaceships were real models, monsters were made of latex and laser guns were just curling irons painted silver? Now imagine a universe where everything was just like this, for real.

For three ordinary guys Tom, Jeffrey and Gavin, this just became a reality. One minute they were watching an old B-grade movie, the next they've been thrust inside the movie itself and find themselves at the helm of a rickety old spaceship. Panic-ridden they stumble into a space battle and make a mortal enemy of the evil Lord Froth while unwittingly saving the space princess Lady Emmanor. Then Suddenly and unexpectedly Jeffrey's psyche is transformed into the sci-fi character Star Captain Kasimir. Tom and Gavin embark on a quest to find a cure for Jeffrey's predicament as for all they know they could be next. They must adapt quickly to this new world if they are to survive long enough to find a way home or else they will be lost in this world forever. This is an action-packed comedy, adventure of giant lizards, space battles, robots, aliens, warlords and amazons that has to be seen to be believed.

Directors statement

When I was a boy I always had an active imagination. That's probably why the Daleks scared me so much and I always had to hide behind the chair when we watched Dr Who. Since then, the early age of sci-fi has fascinated me. It was a big part of my childhood and this constant exposure to them led me to love them as my own. Star-Trek, Lost in Space, Blake's Seven, Logans Run, Space 1999, The Man From Atlantis, The Six Million Dollar Man. Not to mention Star Wars. I love sci-fi but I prefer the mystery and adventure more than any fancy visual effects. Effects these days often spoil a good movie. Not just by overriding the story but by overriding the ability of the characters to be fallible humans. I don't think it's as much fun watching heroes dodge bullets and scale walls just because the effects team can pull it off. So, then I set out to make my own movie. One that lives in a place where all the good things of sci-fi still exists, something true to the art. Old school, and a comedy. Set in the parameters of an old sci-fi universe where everything works like an old sci-fi movie. Low budget special effects, low budget monsters - but a whole lot of fun. That was This Giant Papier Mache Boulder Is Actually Really Heavy. That's how I got there. That, and that my brother-in-law felt the same way. We egged each other on, and we wrote it together. Then I made it on a shoe-string using the lack of budget as part of the desired aesthetic. It helped me create some even cooler things. In fact really, it was a whole lot of fun.

It's an action, adventure, comedy with the word cult written all over it. It has exotic locations, lavish sets, a fantastic wardrobe, kooky robots, awesome one-liners, loads of extras and a cracking good story to boot. We pulled out all the bells and whistles, broke all the rules of low budget filming. It's a big budget plot, set in a low budget sci-fi universe. Have you had enough of this build up?

director/writer/producer

Christian Nicolson is an artist/film maker. He originally studied design but after a 10 year career in Advertising he decided to switch to fine arts. He has had a great deal of success as an artist with over 30 pieces in the Wallace Arts Trust Collection, been a six times finalist in the Wallace Arts Awards, featured several times in New Zealand's largest sculpture shows and is a featured artist in NZ's Favourite Artists Volume 2. He has also made several music videos, short films and won awards and nominations for his low budget style comedy. This is his first venture as a feature film director. He loves sci-fi. This is a project few others would have attempted on such a tiny budget.
